

You're Invited to a Healthcare Professional CE Group Viewing Event

Pediatrician's Corner: A Conversation with a Pediatric Psychologist

In this podcast, pediatric psychologist Dr. Lee and general pediatrician Dr. Chase dive into the most common reason for a referral to a pediatric psychologist: anxiety. They'll review different ages when anxiety may be more likely to present, and will review how it presents, what it might be mistaken for, and what a treatment plan might look like. Their conversation also explores the intersection of pediatric anxiety with important topics in today's world: child temperament and parenting styles, emotional regulation and its role in healthy development, and helping young people make sense of difficult and complex events happening around them. This conversation closes the gap between the specialized knowledge of a pediatric psychologist and the frontline clinical care of the general pediatrician.
