Pediatrician's Corner: A Conversation with a Pediatric Gastroenterologist

In this podcast, pediatric gastroenterologist Dr. Gold and general pediatrician Dr. Fleming discuss some of the most common questions around gastrointestinal (GI) conditions in pediatrics. Their conversation explores how changes to the infant formula landscape have influenced early feeding choices, evidence-based practices around the use of probiotics, and challenges that present with constipation in infants and children. They review a differential diagnosis when food allergy is suspected, emerging biomarkers for autoimmune disorders, and how to discern between picky eating, Pediatric Feeding Disorder, and Avoidant/Restrictive Food Intake Disorder (ARFID). This conversation closes the gap between the specialized knowledge of a pediatric gastroenterologist and the frontline clinical care of the general pediatrician.
